Student Education Program on Prostate cancer (STEPP)

Sun, 19th Dec, 2021 | Sun, 16th Jan, 2022

Sun, 13th Feb, 2022 | Sun, 6th Mar, 2022

7.00 pm to 8.15 pm

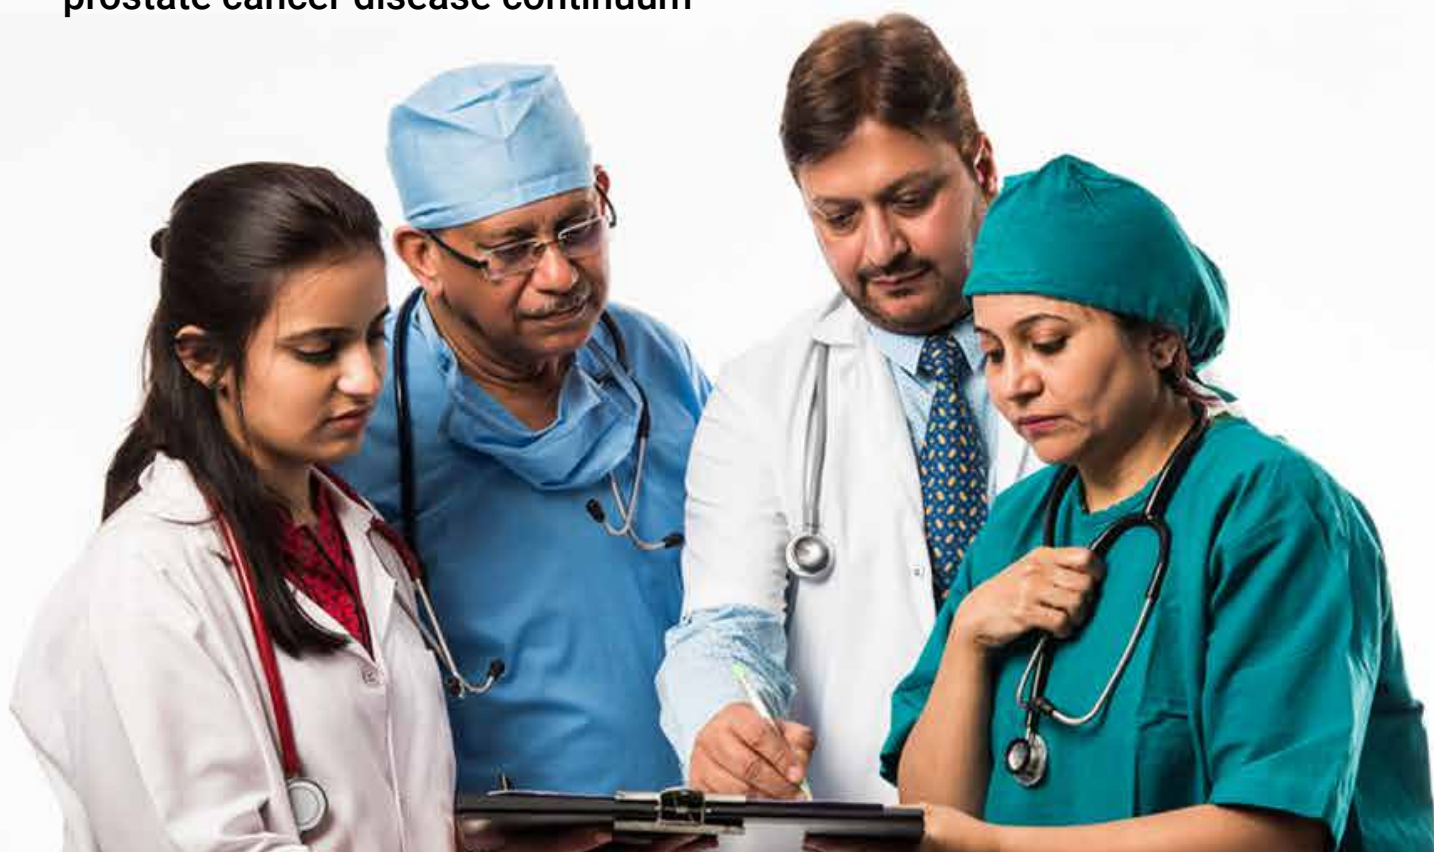

Dear Colleagues,

In recent years, prostate cancer management has become increasingly complex with new surgical techniques, radiotherapy, and the approval of several second-generation anti-androgen therapies. Moreover, clinical trials of targeted therapies, immunotherapies, and novel combination regimens are underway across various forms of the disease.

These case-based discussions highlight evidence from key trials on next-generation androgen-targeting agents, the role of DNA damage-response mutations, biomarker testing and the potential role of innovative targeted therapy, and advances in immunotherapy for prostate cancer. By providing a “roadmap” to the multiple pathways of prostate cancer management, this program serves as a resource for postgraduate students interested in the present and future applications of new science in patient care.

Upon completion of this activity, participants should be better able to:

- Develop personalized, evidence-based treatment plans for patients in different prostate cancer settings with considerations of tumor, patient, and treatment-related factors
- Discuss newer advances in surgical and radiotherapy techniques.
- Discuss the clinical outcomes, latest guidelines, and expert recommendations for selection and sequencing of approved therapies, including hormonal, anti-androgen, cytotoxic, and bone-directed therapies, alone or in combination for non-metastatic and metastatic prostate cancers
- Assess the role of genetic testing for treatment decision-making through the prostate cancer disease continuum
